commercial travelers of this state have shown their appreciation of THE BEE's efforts to afford them every Monday intelligence peculiarly interesting and instructive to the craft. They have contributed to our columns freely in the past, and during March more communications have been received for our commercial traveters' department than ever before in a given time. There are, however, a variety of subjects which have not been discussed by them in THE BEE, and there are hundreds whose personal reminiscences on the road would make intensely interesting reading.

To induce members of the craft to contribute regularly to our columns, it is proposed to offer a thousand mile ticket, good on Nebraska lines, certain conditions. The will be purchased by THE BEE, over the line chosen by the successful competitor, who must cither represent a Nebraska house or travel exclusively in this state for an putside firm. He must present a letter from his house certifying that he is a regular traveling representative of such

A thousand-mile ticket will be presented, under above conditions, to the commercial traveler who shall be first to contribute 6,000 words worthy of being printed in THE BEE. He can count only that which appears in print. Don't be afraid that your communications will not be acceptable. We want the groundwork of your ideas or anecdotes or biographies, personal gossip [or anything that will interest the craft) and we will tone it up if necessary and put it in proper shape for the printer. The second best man will be given a year's subscription to the daily. Each competitor must clip all of his communications as fast as they appear in THE MONDAY BEE, forward them to this office, and sign his full name and the house he represents.

Waiting For a Steamboat. The "Flying Dutchman" writes: I was making a river trip to Little Rock, stopping at all the ports on the way. At Memphis, Tenn., at the Overton hotel, I met a traveling man from Cincinnati who was going up the Arkansas river selling hardware. He was a young man, dressed in the very latest style, hair parted in the middle and standing collar, flashy necktie and patent leather shoes and a tailor-made suit. He was told by the clerk of the hotel I was going that way, and he at once came over to where I was sitting and introduced himself, stating his business and where he was going. I told him that I was going down the next morning on the steamer Ruth as far as the mouth of the White river. Some one had captured two kittens in the hills and gave them to Drye, who raised them. They were nice enough of the White river and there wait for the steamer Importer, Captain John Williams, loaded with sugar and salt from New Orleans, bound for Little Rock, Ark. He said he was a new man; it was his first trip. He would like to have the pleasure of traveling with me, to which I gave my consent, as I was well acquainted with the route. The next morning we arove down over the levee to the steamer which, for a wonder, was on

We had a very pleasant trip and my new friend was delighted with every-thing. In those days the living was grand on the lower Mississippi river In the evening after tea, we had a string band composed of the cabin crew, to play in the ladies' cabin and music and dancing made the night merry. It was early in the morning when we landed at White river and were shown up to the Cumbia hotel. Now, Arkansas hotels in those days not as fine as they might have been. This one was set up on posts on account of overflows in the river. All day we hung around the hotel and over to the river bank watching for signs of a steamer but none showed up. After tea my young friend said if he only had a fiddle he could furnish some entertainment. I said I wished he had and if I had a guitar I could play an accompaniment to his music.

The landlord who was sitting on the porch near by, smoking a pipe, got up without a word and walked away. Soon he was back with a fiddle in one hand and a guitar in the other and came up to us saying, "Let us see what you can do." At once we tuned up and played a few waltzes. He went away again, but soon returned bringing with him a number of Arkansas belles and their beaux. The girls all had red calico dresses trimmed with white braid, and brogan shoes. The gentlemen had long hair, pants in their boots and each one had a brace of navy sixes strapped to him. They had dropped in for a dance.

At first we refused to play but after being coaxed we consented to play a few sets for them and went to the dining room. Such dancing, pigeon wings and double-shuffles you never saw. It was 2 o'clock in the morning when the dance broke up and we went to bed with a call for the first boat up the Arkenness a cali for the first boat up the Arkansas river. No call came and the dance was continued every evening for three days and every morning they would say "no boat." The landlord was doing a great business at his bar. All hands were drinking after every set at 25 cents a drink. The two traveling men, however, were not faring quite so well. They were paying $4 per day for board and making all the music. It was the the morning of the third day, I got up early and walked over to the river bank to see an Irishman shoveting coal into empty boxes. I said, "Pat, what are you doing that for?" He said, "Oh, mon, the boats was here last night. Two went up the White river, and one up the Arkansas." That was the one we had been waiting for all that time. The landlord had been playing us and getting all the money. We refused to pay our hotel bill, ($24), for two men for three days, and had to go back to Memphis, and the hardware man never made that trip up the Arkansas river.

A permanent organization was formed, with A. J. Conlee, president; J. A. Forbes, treasurer; E. J. Eggleston, secretary, and H. M. Chase, corresponding responding secretary. In view of the fact that Beatrice has so rapidly come to the front as headquarters for a large number of traveling men, those already making it their home felt that their numbers warranted them in forming an organization for furthering their mutual interests, both in a social way and for gaining recognition as a body, locally and abroad. The social advantages to be enjoyed will enable the various members of the club to en-tertain in a suitable style their friends and members of the profession from abroad. The Beatrice board of trade has most heartly endorsed and en-couraged the club, having tendered their rooms for the club rooms.

A vote of thanks was extended to mine host Hamilton for courtesies extended during the evening.

A grand ball, given by the club, will formally open the new Paddock hotel here, the proceeds of which will be used for fitting up the club rooms. The following traveling men were present: R. F. Bacon, L. W. Willis, C. E. Danforth, C. W. Miller, F. D. Morrill, N. D. Hubbard, A. J. Conlee, C. S. Fosselman, F. O. Waynant, O. H. Phillip, W. Z. Warner, H. M. Chase, W. R. Whiteman, J. A. Forbes, A. Herman, E. J. Eggleston, S. S. Sims.

Jim and the Snake.

Old Veracity relates the following and vouches, of course, for the truth of it: "Now, boys, what I am going to tell you, is the good God's truth, and nothing else. Down in the state of Kentucky is a little town called Nicholasville. Not far from there is the Kentucky river, a fine stream for fish, and noted for the picturesque scenery along its banks. In the summer of '87 I was traveling in that state, and was invited to join a fishing party, from Nicholas-ville to the Kentucky. Among the nec-essary articles, requisite for a camping party, taken along, was a jug of cele-brated whisky, made in that country by a man named King. Well, we got to the river all right, and went into camp. Among our party was a bold, dare devil of a fellow, named Jim, who, as soon as we got our tent struck, commenced a vigorous attack upon the jug. In a short time he got pretty drunk, and getting drowsy, he said he would go up on the hillside and take a nap. Atsupper time I was sent to hunt Jim, he not having shown up. Not far from the camp I found him, asleep, and you can imagine my horror, when I saw near him a snake, known as the copperhead, one of the deadliest reptiles of the south, coiled ready to strike. At this moment Jim lazily opened his eyes, and took in the situation. Gazing fearlessly into the eyes of the snake he said: You d-n copperhead devil, you want to bite me do you? Well, my friend (hic), if you do, you couldn't have (hic) chosen a more opportune moment to do it (hic), for by gosh 1 am heeled, so light in.' And, gentlemen, would you believe it? that snake, completely abashed, slowly uncoiled itself and glided away. You see it recognized the fact that Jim was master of the situation—full of liquor, you know—a sure antidote for the deadly venom of a rattlesnake or copperhead. Whisky, straight, please." Sitting around the radiators at the Thurston, without any asking, Old Veracity, gazing through the window at the down-pour of rain out of doors. "It was just such a day as this that Jim Jones fought Clay Drye's wild-cats at Hustonville, Ky." Not a soul said a word, and unsolicited O. V. went on: "You see, boys, it was this way: pets at first, but as they grew to be older they became so vicious as to ne-cessitate confinement. They were accordingly placed in a cage, where being constantly guyed by the village urchins, they become very ferocious. So one rainy day John Brooks, a regular tough, came to Hustonville, and, filling himself with whisky, wanted to fight something. Somebody suggested that he tackle Drye's cats, which project, seeming to strike him, be offered to bet anybody $10 that he could whip both of them single-handed. The money having been put up, Brooks, after having prepared himself by donning a heavy overcoat and gloves, was turned into a room about sixteen by twenty, where the cats had previously been placed. Pretty soon the sounds of the combat became audible to the crowd on the outside. Above the snarls of the cats came the sonorous voice of Brooks, who said: 'We are now fight-ing! I now have one of the devils! He now has me! I am choking the devil to death! Holy Moses, he now has me! My right eye is now gone! I have just bit off one of the devil's ears! He has torn off my nose! Help! Fire! Mur-der!!!!!!! He was rescued in a wretched condition, the cats making their escape, and never being recaptured. Brooks got well, with the loss of an eye and a whole nose, and lives until this day, a confirmed prohibitionist. Let's liquor."

J. K. Armsby in his last circular, thus feelingly acknowledges the receipt of a bottle of perfumery:

J. S. Kirk & Co. sent us just before starting on our last trip, a little bottle of perfumery with a request that we use it ourselves, and there was a nameless something about that note that would seem to imply that we needed it. We did not get mad, we just took in the perfume and when we opened that botile, jee-whiz how sweet the perfume. We remembered back in boyhood days when we worked the bung-hole of an old molasses barrel with a long stick after the sugar in the bottom, and thought nothing could be as sweet. We remember later in life when we were the big boy of the school and kissed the school marm behind the door for the first time, and we thought then the heavens had opened and were raining molasses candy and ginger snaps; but this bottle of perfumery knocked out all memories and realities. So in wonder-ment we looked to the label and we found the solution of the problem. It read, the "Bouquet Essence of Frances Bennet." She must have been a daisy, and if a little of her boiled down was as sweet as this, what would an entire lap-full of her unboiled have been. Old as we are and bald-headed besides, we would have held her for a minute just to rest the other fellow. It seems hard to have to boil her, but if it was to be done, we are glad as good boys that the Kirks got her. But we advise every body to send for a bottle before she is all gone, and don't get fooled on the arti-cle. Buy Frances or nothing. Send the orders to Bluff Old Alick or Honest John. (Milt, the old darling, is in Europe hunting up some more girls to boil.) Wall or Charles are such giddy things, it would be just like them to run in the juice of some other girl on you in the juice of some other girl on you. But if you get the real Frances and don't say she was the sweetest smelling girl you ever knew, send the bill to us.

The Philosophy of Life. The philosophy of Francis Bacon is the philosophy of life, "Despise no new accident in the body," said he, "but ask opinion of it; in sickness principally respect health and in health action." There are many socalled slight affections which men think it brave not to notice. It is not bravery; it is folly. As Bacon says, "despise no new accident of the body."
